Date Line. A hypothetical line coinciding approximately with the meridian 180° from Greenwich, fixed by international or general agreement as the place where each calendar day first begins. The day for any given locality commences when it is midnight at that place; hence, any given day, say Monday, first begins at midnight on the date line, and following the midnight line begins continuously farther westward, in New Zealand, Australia, etc. It is thus Monday from the date line westward to the midnight line and Sunday from the date line eastward to the midnight line. Finally, as the midnight line reaches the date line again, it is for the instant Monday over practically the whole world; then Tuesday begins, and so on. Thus for the greater part of the twenty-four hours Hawaii has the same day name as San Francisco, and Manila the same day name (one day later than the day of Hawaii) as Australia. Thus, when it is Monday noon, May 1, at San Francisco, it is 4 o'clock (standard time) or 14 minutes past 4 (local mean time) Tuesday morning, May 2, at Manila. A vessel crossing the date line to the westward sets the date forward by one day, as from Sunday to Monday; if the line is crossed in going eastward, the date is set back. To avoid dividing places in close intercourse, the line is deflected bet. 45°N lat. and 80°N lat., so that all Asia lies to the W of it, all North America, including the Aleutian Is., to the E; and bet. 12°S lat. and 56°S lat. the line is deflected so that Chatham Is. and the Tonga group lie to the W.

History: Invaded from Iranian plateau c. 2000-1200 B.C. by Aryans, who pushed to S and SE the earlier Dravidian and Munda inhabitants; developed important religious systems: Brahmanism, with its accompanying social caste system, evolved from the Vedic religion of Aryan invaders, and Buddhism and Jainism, both founded in 6th cent. B.C.; invaded across Indus in NW (Punjab) by Alexander the Great 327-325 B.C. Northern part consolidated (with Afghanistan) into an empire by Chandragupta, Hindu founder of Maurya dynasty (c. 322-185 B.C.), whose grandson Asoka (d. 232 B.C.) extended his empire by addition of kingdoms of Bengal and Orissa to include over two thirds of peninsula, all but extreme S part; N part again united by rulers of Gupta dynasty (320-480 A.D.); divided politically into states of varying size and power. Gradually conquered 1526-1707 by Mogul emperors, of whom the first was Baber and the most famous Akbar (1556-1605), until their power was challenged in late 17th cent. by the Marathas, a Hindu people whose powerful confederacy was broken by Afghans at Panipat (q.v.) 1761; torn by dynastic conflicts with decline of Mogul power after 1707, thus opening way for European intervention and territorial acquisition.

Period of British control: Establishment of trading posts ("factories") in 17th cent. by rival British and French East India Companies (chartered 1600 and 1664, respectively) led in 18th cent. to war bet. England and France culminating in French defeat at Plassey 1757 (see CALCUTTA, DECCAN, FRENCH INDIA); ascendancy of British East India Company resulted in first extensive territorial acquisitions (Bengal and Bihar 1765, the Circars 1766) but alleged misrule by Company caused British Parliament to pass Regulating Act 1773 and Pitt's Act 1784 establishing "dual control" of Company and Crown; after wars with Mysore (q.v.) and Marathas, British acquired Malabar Coast 1792, Kanara 1799, Carnatic 1801, Orissa 1803, and Maratha lands (see POONA); Company's monopoly of trade abolished 1813; annexed Burma 1826-86, Sind 1843, Punjab 1849, Berar and Nagpur 1853, Oudh 1856, and Baluchistan (q.v.); by 1887 the parts of India not under direct British control were protected states, under native rulers, with varying degrees of dependence upon British; government modified (1861, 1909, 1919) in direction of limited self-rule. After World War I, scene of bitter struggle bet. British rulers and Indian Nationalists, under Gandhi's leadership; eventual federation of all India the goal of Act of 1935 which separated Burma and Aden from India, divided British India into 11 provinces each under a governor and provincial legislature, and provided for eventual membership of Indian States in central legislature at New Delhi. During World War II Manipur state in Assam invaded by Japanese Mar.-June 1944; NE Assam used by Allies as base for aid to China by air, for construction of Ledo Road (later Stilwell Road) through N Burma, and for campaign in N Burma; after war period 1945-47 marked by famines and by rioting bet. Hindus and Moslems. By Act of Parliament July 18, 1947, effective Aug. 15, 1947, British rule given up and India divided into the Indian Union (predominantly Hindu), Pakistan (predominantly Moslem), and Indian States originally with more or less independent status: see INDIAN UNION, PAKISTAN, INDIAN STATES.
